MARTHA MANS, Artist's Statement

There is something really special about watercolor that cannot be duplicated with any other medium. The clarity of its hues and transparencies, reminiscent of stained glass, and its fluidity, is specific only to watercolor. No other medium offers the wonderful controlled effects that can be accomplished with a little understanding of the ratio of paint to water. Watercolor is very challenging, and for those that spend the time to understand its qualities and learn to let the water and the pigment do its magic, watercolor can be so much fun.

I want to thank you all for entrusting me with the enormous task of jurying the 2019 Pikes Peak Watercolor Society's International Watermedia Show. It was a privilege, and so interesting to see the exciting directions artists are going with Watermedia.

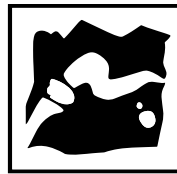

There were so many wonderful entries. It took a lot of evaluating to come to the final one hundred paintings. I know that every juror has their own criteria for judging a show and mine centers on the elements that make up a well designed painting and the artist's understanding of those elements. Whether the artist is working in a traditional or abstract manner, the elements of painting must be considered. I try to be as fair as possible and take the time to look carefully at the merits of each entry.

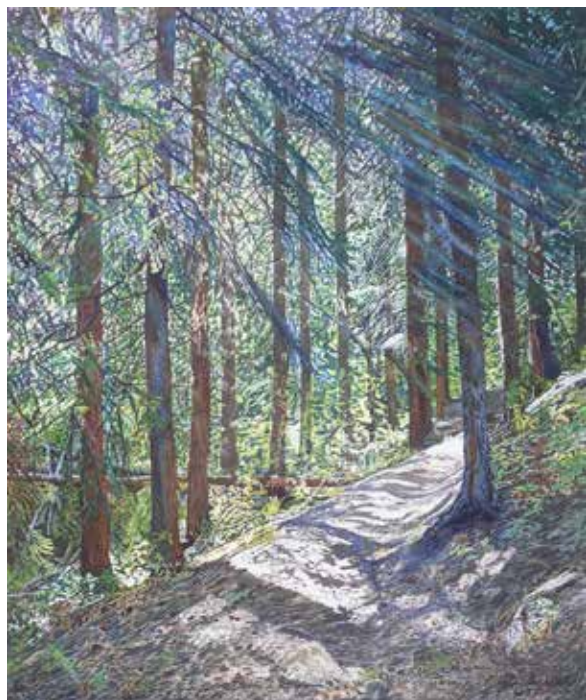

Congratulations to those that have a painting in the show and to those who were given awards for their outstanding achievements.

I do hope you all enjoy the show as presented.
